Performance Measurement and You

One of my favorite radio programs is "The Story" which is broadcasted on Chicago Public Radio. The Story, hosted by Dick Gordon, has been described by one listener as "...finding the ordinary us and putting our stories out there." And that's exactly what it is. In one hour, you get to listen to ordinary people telling their story, in their own words.

Performance measurement is quite similar. It's our story. Although not publicly broadcasted for one hour each day, we do tell our story to many agencies and departments frequently throughout the year. Unfortunately though, it's never the whole story. It's mostly just a collage of chapters that answer specific questions: "How many cases?"; "How many people?"; "How much collected?"; "How much spent?" and on, and on, and on.

Several years ago, employees from each unit in our department got together, went to some training and collaborated on a set of 18 measures that we felt answered the bulk of questions typically asked of us and would serve as "our story". Since that time, we've picked out a few essential measures that have been labeled as our "Executive Level" measures and we report those findings to the County Administrator every quarter. Unfortunately, we've failed to routinely publish those reports to our fellow employees. To correct that, we have attached the reports that were issued in 2007 for your review. I sincerely hope that you take the time to look at these reports. After all, they are your story and you should know what's being told.

"Not doing more than the average is what keeps the average down."

William M. Winans

Just recently, we have begun to review and update those 18 measures. We are also trying to incorporate the ten CourTools Measures designed by the National Center for State Courts into our routine. The CourTools Measures "...draw on the civic ideals and major performance areas unique to courts, as defined by the Trial Court Performance Standards (TCPS).<sup>1</sup> As it stands today, our original 18 measures have been reorganized into a total of 12 measures to include:

- ➲ Success of Probation - Adult
- ➲ Success of Probation and Detention Services - Juvenile
- ➲ Success of Jury Commission
- ➲ Satisfaction of Court Users
- ➲ Resource Strength
- ➲ Success of Case Management Practices
- ➲ Financial Health of the Court
- ➲ Impact of Compliance Program
- ➲ Success of Public Awareness & Education Programs
- ➲ Success of Alternative Dispute Resolution
- ➲ Quality of Assessments, Evaluations and Investigations
- ➲ Quality and Preservation of Files and Records

After you review the attached reports that told our story for 2007, we invite you to share your questions and comments with a member of the SMAART Team. Specifically, what was it that we missed, or failed to report in our story? What information are you capturing each day/week/month that would help build our story? Just because we're not asked doesn't mean we can't offer.

Thanks for your time.
